Letters of John Brown's Sons to their Wives at home, 5 miles north of Harper's Ferry, in an its will be recollected that Oliver and Watson old house on the Kennedy Farm, where we keep It will be recollected that Oliver and Watson Brown, sone of Capt. John Brown, fell at Harper's Ferry. The Philadelphia correspondent of the Anti Slavery Standard in noticing the execution of Stevens and Hazlett, appends some extracts from the letters of Oliver Brown and Watson Brown to their respective wives, during their sojourn near the scene of their death. They show the self-sacrificing seal and devotion of the brave young men for a Cause, to pity him for having to stay at home than he and possess a touching interest. The writer does me for being away. Tell him to keep a and possess a touching interest. The writer says:

What an extraordinary group of men was that of which that still more than extraordinary man, John Brown, was the centre! The more we hear and know of them, the more we find in these people to admire. Each one was a hero in himself, and worthy of a special chapter in the great record which history will make up of this transaction. As an illustration of this, in part at least, I have some letters before me which I mean to copy for your readers' benefit. They are of a strictly private character, but, as I am at liberty to use them according to my discretion. I deem it proper to The first term of the first term at liberty to use them according to my discretion. I deem it proper to be writtened as the series, in the seem according to my discretion. age." The second letter exhibits the same obsracteristics. It is postmarked "Chambersburg," and, omitting a few passages too sacredly pri-vate for publication, is as follows: Hoses, October 9, '59.

"My DEAR MARYELS: Having opportunity to write you once more, I improve it with the greatest pleasure to myself and with the hope of pleasing you. I arrived here two days sooner than father and Watson. They have econer than father and Watson. They have gone back once more. We are all well at present. You can hardly think haw I want to see you or how lonesome I was the day I left you. That day I shall never forget. I peased some good resolutions on my way to New York. I mean to live up to them. Nothing class could strengthen me to do the right so much as the thought of you. It is when I look at your picture that I am wholly ashamed of my every meanness, weakness and folly. I would not part with that picture for anything on earth—but the original. I have made a morocco case for it, and carry it close around my body. I am more and more determined reary day to live a more unsettish life.

"Now, Marths, you can hardly conceive my great anxiety about you in your present situs thou and you will certainly allow me to suggest some ideas to you far your own good. Let me some ideas to you far year own good. Let me ask you to try to keep up good, cheerful spirits. Take plenty of sleep and rest; plenty of outdoor exercise. Bathe often. And finally, do read good books, such as Parker's Sermons and Combe's Constitution of Man. These books will do much to keep you from being loncaume.

"Finally, Martha, do try to enjoy yourself.— Make the most of overything.
